Las Vegas dam No. 81 of the independent Order of Beavers is no more. From its ashes there may arise the Hermit club of Las Vegas, which promises to be the liveliest social organization in New Mexico. The Hermit club will in a short time sign a lease on a handsome suit of rooms which will be remodeled for a club home to be known as the "The Heritage." Ground plans for the club rooms have been drawn and practically all that remains to be done is to begin the work of remodeling. As soon as the necessary papers have applications for memberships and gives indications of growing quickly to 150 members. At the next meeting the entertainment committee has been instructed to furnish refreshments.

BOOK CENSORSHIP
FOR LIBRARIES*Las Vegas Women Have Initiated a Movement in This Direction; Evil Influence of Some Books Upon Young.

Las Vegas, N. M., April 20.—Owing to the fact that many books find their way into the libraries, which exert a harmful influence upon the youthful minds of the younger people who read them, several prominent women of Las Vegas have started a movement leading toward the more rigid censorship of the books admitted to the shelves of the public library. It is understood they will suggest at an early date that a committee be appointed to pass upon all books purchased for the institution. Under this plan the books are to be read by one or more of the members of the committee, who will decide as to whether it is fit work to be placed in the hands of the boys and girls who patronize the library.

As has been shown in many cases evil books make impressions on young minds and often the cause of injury to the morals of the reader. It is understood the pastors of some of the churches have been requested to assist in creating a sentiment for closer scrutiny of the library books before they are placed in circulation. In many cities a commission which works with the library board has charge of the selection of new books.

MUNICIPAL WORK
AND EDUCATION*New York Adopts Novel Methods in Bettering Her Water Supply and at Same Time Improving Her Idle Citizens.

New York, April 20.—New York City, through its system of water supply, is trying something new, that of giving persons work and at the same time giving them an education. This is done by camp schools where work on the water supply is done and through books which are distributed from the public libraries.

"Although there is no distinct appropriation for this, I am carrying it out just the same," Commissioner Chadwick, who inaugurated the work, said recently in the New York Evening Post. "The fact that there is no money available has not stopped us. By private subscription we have obtained the funds and are going ahead with the work."

"At Ashokan Dam and at the Kensico reservoir, Valhalla, the contractors erected buildings for these camp schools and for the teachers. The pupils who attend are Indians, slaves, Hungarians and poles, who not only need to learn the English language, but who also need to get a general knowledge of the laws and institutions of the United States, of the federal and state and municipal governments, and of the rights of persons and property."

"The city's work is done under a strict 8-hour law. This leaves the workers with many hours of leisure, which, unemployed, might lead them into trouble. We have aimed to utilize this leisure to the best advantage of the workers. We find that if their minds are properly employed during their hours of recreation, they will pay closer attention to their work and will be more likely to put in eight hours of real, efficient labor."

"The men have the advantage of becoming intelligent law abiding citizens. Incidentally, too, the city of New York will get every dollar's worth of labor to which it is entitled. Also, the medium of a common language eliminates many wasteful misunderstandings between employer and employee."

The two camp schools comprise a kindergarten for the children of the workers, a day school and a night school for the workers themselves. These two last mentioned schools are divided into three classes, the lowest of which is for men who cannot speak any English, and in which the pupils learn the rudiments of the English language. Their readers are prepared according to the method of double translation. Every page of Italian faces a page of the same subject matter in English. The subject matter of each lesson is chosen from the men's field of interest as gleaned from their daily life.

The second class studies the same kind of subject matter, in the same method, but the subjects and the instruction are more advanced. The readers used in this class deal with personal and property rights, and with the laws of state and country. The third, or highest class can read, speak and write English fairly well. Their lessons consist of dictation, letter writing, business and friendly letters, citizenship qualifications, geography, history and arithmetic.

"An example of the progress made by the employee who attend these camp schools may be seen in the following extract from a letter written by one of them:

"I remember when I was with my family, when my mother was always after me to go to learn to be a good and honest man. I remember when I did also get her the last time, ready to leave my country, to ride the United States. Now I am here and glad to have found many good people, who never refuse me their company and try to teach me the shortest way to teach me to speak the new strange language."

"The human side of the work must be considered," continued Commissioner Chadwick. "It is not alone a problem of bringing water into the city of New York under a business administration, under the best engineering methods. It is also the training of men under a good and wise administration, into good citizenship. The administration sees the men's point of view and does its best to help themselves. It is to be hoped that such knowledge as the men gain in these camp schools will eventually become a prerequisite to the right of franchise, and that this problem will be intelligently taken up and worked out by the government."

"In the meantime, while the board of water supply is building the aqueduct and bringing water to the great city of New York, it is at the same time recognizing the responsibility which rests upon it in the development of the character of its employees, under wise and proper educational regulations."

EXCELLENT BASEBALL MATERIAL FOUND FOR
LAS VEGAS CLUB

Las Vegas, N. M., April 20.—The Las Vegas baseball club will be immensely strengthened by players who have arrived recently.

Harper Harmon, who pitched for the Maroons last summer, has secured a position as a mechanician in the Santa Fe shops. He is working on the night shift and will be able to play with the team this summer. Few better twirlers ever stood on the local mound than Harper Harmon. He will prove a strong man in the Maroons' line-up. In the person of McGee, a Santa Fe dispatcher, the Maroons have secured a crack jack second baseman and a strong hitter. McGee last season pitched for Evansville in the Three I league. His pitching arm is not what it used to be, but he can still hit the ball across the diamond and field hot grounders and liners like a big leaguer. McGee has assumed Manager Simpkins his services are at the disposal of the local club.

Man Who Killed His Sweetheart Sent Up; District Court of Colfax County Imposes Punishments.

Raton, N. M., April 20.—The time of the district court for Colfax county was occupied Saturday forenoon in imposing sentences on the prisoners who were found guilty by a jury, or who pleaded guilty to the charges against them.

Sentences to the territorial penitentiary were imposed upon fifteen prisoners. Twenty-one were sentenced in all, but the other six received jail sentences or fines. The following is the list of those sentenced:

Comando Montoya found guilty by a jury of larceny in one head of meat cattle from the Rohr estate, not less than three years nor more than five years. Sentence suspended by the court during good behavior.

Gavino Pacheco, larceny of eight horses from Capt. W. S. French, plead guilty, sentenced to not less than two nor more than three years in the penitentiary.

The court adjourned sine die Saturday afternoon. Judge Roberts announced that he would at a later date, sometime during the month of May, call a term of court to hear civil cases without jury. A large number of civil cases being continued on account of the excess of criminal business.

The jury returned a verdict of guilty in the case of the Territory vs. Henry Garzina, charged with violation of the Sunday law. Judge Roberts sentenced Garzina to fifteen days in the county jail and $15 fine. In the case of the Territory vs. Lenson, charged with keeping open a pool and billiard hall in violation of the Sunday law, the jury returned a verdict of not guilty.
